WASHINGTON, April 8.—Secretary Hoke Smith has received a detailed report from Agent Bennett of Union agency on the present trouble between the factions of the Choctaw nation. After repeated conferences and such investigation as he was able to make, the agent says that he is thoroughly convinced that the militia, acting under Governor Jones' orders, were the aggressors, and that the other party, commonly called the Locke party, is the aggrieved one. After listening to the agent's advice the Locke men proposed to surrender at once their arms if he could promise to protect them from the militia. This offer Agent Bennett, of course, could not accept.

The Locke party declared that they were peaceable, law-abiding Indians, charged with no offense; that they were ready to surrender to any proper officer of their nation, clothed with authority that they had been unwillingly driven to take themselves together as a means of protection against murder by the militia, which they declared was led by their most bitter personal and political enemies; that the militia had needlessly assaulted them and their wives and children in their homes, wrecked and ruined their property, attempted their lives, dragged their wives, mothers and children from their homes, and otherwise grievously and wantonly wronged them. They also said that they were not their intention to attack the militia, but simply to defend themselves against further assault and outrage.

Agent Bennett afterwards talked with the captain of the militia, who questioned his authority to inquire into the disturbance. Governor Jones also questioned the agent's right to be present to inquire into the matter, which he said was an affair concerning the Choctaw people only, and that the United States had no right to interfere.

After an elaborate review of the whole situation, Agent Bennett concludes that the calling out of the militia by Governor Jones to arrest Willis Jones was unnecessary and unlawful, and that the conflict precipitated by them was the cause of a drunken and irresponsible mob, banded together as militia for the purpose of murdering men, women and children.

thereby removing their political opponents and intimidating others, in order to perpetuate the power of the parties at present in authority. That many of the aggressors were so intoxicated as to be unable to sit upon their horses; that they shot promiscuously into public and private buildings, occupied by some cases by women and children, and that, in short, the acts of the militia were more like those of wild beasts, than of civilized men.

Paris, Tex., April 8.—There is no change in the status of the Choctaw war. The militia went to Okla., apparently making no move. They keep their pickets out, as if they expected an attack. This morning twenty-five men came down from the Choctaw nation, and were received by a detachment of troops to the scene of the threatened trouble, to maintain the peace and to protect life and property.
